I probably shouldn't use this free time to pen a quick monograph entitled "To Eat Fat Babies Without Conscience: an exploration of L. Frank Baum's 'the Hungry Tiger' as literalized metaphor for sadistic sexual psychopathy."

But I have never said no to a good temptation.

...oh damn, shots fired at Johns Hopkins. I need to call somebody. Guess the essay waits.

...I am not relieved.

(Especially as I'm in a room filled with ravening pre-meds with their first anatomy exam tomorrow. Eek.)

Well, it was a family member of a patient who was disgruntled about his mother's care.

Sounds like SWAT shot him.

Wait, the doctor was shot during surgery?

Unsure. Sounds like he was shot outside the patient's room, but everything is very vague right now.

I suggest checking the news story and the journalist's twitter feed; you'll know more or less as much as I do.

And the newest new news is that, as is not uncommon in these cases, the suspect shot himself and his mother.

Buggerall.

When I heard he'd been killed, my first thought was, "Great--his mom's already suffering. How is what he did supposed to help her?"

Now I'm thinking, "Wow. I guess he thought this would take care of it."

Some days I just kind of hate humans.

I think I need to cuddle a bunny.

Good thing you have one!

Murder-suicide fits the profile.

Unfortunately.

I'm waiting for this article, mister. Then you can move onto C. S. Lewis, no doubt?
